GENETICS

SYSTEMS BIOLOGY

5.10.2006

A nature genetics paper shows that a single mutation in Pseudomonas has pleiotropic effects – not limited to the level of proteins in the particular network but changing also their relationships. Sounds like a soccer match where a player has to leave the court – which changes positions of all remaining players. "The adaptive mutation draws proteins into tighter coregulation", yea, yea.

CC-BY-NC Science Surf accessed 05.11.2025 ☐