

PHILOSOPHY

I HAD A DREAM TONIGHT

9.08.2007

I had a dream tonight. I do the final revision of a paper following many months of work and submit it to an internet server. Only 30 minutes later the first science journal agent contacts me offering immediate publication. More and more offers arrive and I finally decide to hand it over to nice publishing company that will pay so much money to continue my research.

I woke up and found me signing a form that a collaborator sent me overnight

In consideration of the expenses of editing and publishing and the professional benefits relating to publication of my article or other written work, as specified above, I assign exclusively to the XXX Society all right, title, and interest to my article or other written work, as specified above, and any photographs that may be contained in the material including (1) the copyright and all renewals thereof; (2) the right to grant permission to republish the article in any and all media in whole or in part with or without fee; (3) the right to reproduce the article or other written work, as specified above, for sale or free distribution; and (4) the right to publish the article or other written work, as specified above, in whole or in part with or without fee. Having assigned the above rights to the XXX, I understand that no material can be released or distributed without permission from the XXX.

