FULCHESTER GRADUATES

9.08.2008 1 COMMENT

Nature June, 19, 2008, has a nice correspondence: Fewer academics could be the answer to insufficient grants. A British author writes what many think but nobody wants to say. Read more about the country of Euphoria, his four universities, each with ten academics and the ambitious president of Fulchester ... Unfortunately there is no proposal how to regulate the number of academics. As long as doctoral students are employed under such poor conditions (like half salaries here) there will be no way to deny them a title even if you think that their work is not an appropriate for a Fulchester graduate.
