I FINALLY DROPPED FEEDLY

6.12.2016

With the recent discussion about (successful?) profiling of voters, I do not want anymore anyone analyzing my reading habits. Feedly's "Terms and Conditions" is a dead link by today while I remember them to run also detailed user analysis. Unfortunately, the next cloud news aggregator is buggy after all these years with updates occuring only sporadically. I therefore moved to Miniflux that works right out of the box. The only thing I wanted to change in templates/item.php is the following line from

" class="image-enclosure"
rel="noreferrer" target="_blank"><?= t('attachment') ?>

to display the thumbnails

But even that' si not possible as there is an excellent stand-alone news reader with Readkit on OS X.
